APPLICABLE DATA PROTECTION LAWS

The primary Data Protection law in Australia is the Federal Privacy Act 1988 and its Australian Privacy Principles ('APPs'). In New Zealand, it is the Privacy Act 2020. Both will be referred to as the 'Privacy Act'.

In addition to the Federal Privacy Act 1988 which applies in each States, several Australian States and Territories have also enacted privacy legislation. In particular, New South Wales, the Australian Capital Territory, the Northern Territory, Queensland, Tasmania and Victoria all have specific privacy laws governing the handling of Personal Information by government agencies in those States and Territories.

Furthermore, there may be other laws at the local level that regulate aspects not covered by the primary Data Protection laws or other national laws may regulate the use of Personal Data in specific circumstances.

LEGAL JUSTIFICATION FOR THE PROCESSING OF PERSONAL DATA UNDER THE PRIVACY ACT

The Privacy Act does not recognize the concept of "legal basis" or justification for the processing of personal data but it rather allows collection of personal information (other than sensitive information) only if the information is reasonably necessary for one or more of the controller's functions or activities.

You can find an explanation of the necessity for CNH to collect and process your Personal Data in Section 3 of the Privacy Statement.
